

November 19, 2008

FOOD STUFF; Go Ahead. Pretend Those Pies Are Your Own.

By FLORENCE FABRICANT

When Evan and Joelle Obsatz decided to expand Butterfield Market, the Upper East Side food store that their family has owned since 1955, the brother and sister found a space that had more room for their catering operation. Now called Butterfield Kitchen, 346 East 92nd Street, it also has a small retail outlet for sandwiches and prepared food.

In time for the holidays, the Butterfield cooks will bake from scratch the pies and cobblers of Kathleen King, who owns Tate's Bake Shop in Southampton, N.Y. Homey, nicely burnished apple, apple-crumble, pumpkin, pecan and berry pies are $25 each. They will be sold at the new store and the original one, at 1114 Lexington Avenue (78th Street).

Butterfield Kitchen and Butterfield Market are both taking orders for roasted turkeys ($125 unstuffed, 14 to 16 pounds; $160 stuffed); the turkeys will be ready for pickup on Thanksgiving Day at Butterfield Kitchen, (212) 772-8782. The phone for Butterfield Market: (212) 288-7800.